Higher Gas Bills for Georgia Consumers Prompt Rate Reviews at Allconnect

ATLANTA, January 15, 2010 – Following this week’s announcement by the Georgia Public Service Commission warning of higher natural gas bills, consumers are accessing Allconnect.com to evaluate rate plans and ensure they are paying the lowest price possible.

The Commission noted that December 2009 was 30% colder than the previous year resulting in consumers using more gas and receiving higher bills. Consequently, Georgia consumers are going to Allconnect.com for an easy way to review natural gas providers and plans, including the option to compare variable versus fixed rate plans.

By entering their home address at Allconnect.com, consumers find a one-stop resource that enables them to access the lowest price and most convenient plan for their household. This free, online service not only shows the current rates, but it also highlights any special promotions, such as gift cards or bill credits for new customers. One-time fees, contract terms, and other specifics are clearly spelled out, and there is a best-price guarantee

Allconnect.com is a free online resource to review and compare the costs and choices for natural gas, as well as other essential home services including high speed Internet, phone, cable TV, satellite TV, home security systems, and electricity. Consumers also have the option to call 1-800-ALLCONNECT to reach a Home Services Consultant who will review the different rates and plans specific to the caller’s address.

“The Commission noted that the cold weather is expected to continue,” says Mark Miller, Allconnect CEO. “Even in Georgia, winter is not going to be over anytime soon. By reviewing their natural gas plans and rates at Allconnect, consumers could find savings immediately.”
